How to Keep a Husband

By Robert Rudd Whiting.

"How to keep a husband?"
What can a woman do
For what though Jill be Well preserved
If she can't preserve Jack, too?

"How to keep a husband?"
The enough to make one weep
For though Jack gets nicely picked
Jill finds him hard to keep.

"How to keep a husband?"
The problem of the day
Would be hard to find enabbling
The only dead sure way.

It would seem that every wife in Greater New York has the art of managing or keeping a husband down to a fine point. The Evening World has been flooded by letters in response to the offer of prizes of $10, $5, $2, and five $1's for the best five words telling "How to Keep a Husband." These letters are more interesting than anything that can be written about them, so here they are:

Be Friends as Well as Lovers.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
They must be friends as well as lovers, and if she does her best she can always keep him attentive. Man is only human and if treated with consideration and common sense will generally respond along the same line. A jealous, nagging woman is her own unhappiness. People can always find exactly what they look for, and they get just what they give. If she is happy she will radiate happiness. Envy, jealousy and revenge should never be fostered, for they are deadly poisons. The attractive man who has to drop his friends to please his wife cannot be blamed for getting tired of it and of seeking other diversions. She should keep herself so attractive that she will always be his queen. Two people to be happy must not expect too much of each other, but be simply willing to take up the practical possibilities.
Mrs. M. M. JOHNSON.

Let Him Do as He Likes.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
One way to keep a husband's love is to learn to cook good, substantial meals, to keep yourself as neat and clean as possible, to make home attractive, and if he is tired and wants to rest don't tell him he can't be down on the bed because he will miss it all up. Let him use all his freedom he wants in his home. You do what you feel like when he is at work, let him do the same when he comes home. If you have any little quarrels don't tell your mother or your neighbors, but keep it to yourself. Don't have any secrets from him. Don't let him see that you care too much for him and that you are afraid of him. Let him see that you have a will of your own. If you do this I think you will manage to keep him.
MRS. GORDON.

Lambaste Him.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
This husband keeping question seems to be afflicting perplexing to some women, but as far as I am concerned I had a darn sight rather lambaste a husband of mine for all his shortcomings, and I think in the end it's just as satisfying as years of experimenting trying to find out what is the matter with the infernal brute, when all he needs in this world is a darn good spanking.
ANN W. TWINE.

Give Him a Surprise or Two.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
1. Get a husband worth holding. 2. Accept making the best of him and out of him as the supreme business of life. 3. Love him, feed him; don't overdo either. 4. Surprise him by being habitually truthful. Most men like this homey virtue when they get used to it. 5. Be shy because of your own selfishness. Ribbon-run lingerie in its soft beauty is a man's true allure. 6. Don't make a crime of masculine procreations. Some mighty good husbands know the value of a "roll house." 7. Laugh at his jokes. (This is important.) 8. Don't try to make him over. Leave that to time and Providence. 9. Love him to embrace faith, sympathy, maternal tenderness and patience. A man never ceases to be a child "where I love." 10. Possession is nine-tenths of the wife's supremacy. The other tenth should be easy. Just remember that a man sacrifices a lot when he reads after-wards and that the art of obligation should be mutual.
LORRAINE K. STANBERRY.

Don't Try Any Bluffs.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
If refinement, beauty of person and dress, courtesy, modesty won him, why not continue them? If all these were only a bluff, why not be sportsmen enough to play the game to the end? It can't be done? Oh, yes, it can! It is the way to keep a husband!
Mrs. LEWIS GEORGE.

Twelve Demands for Him.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
1. Be always the same person that he would and won, as the same ways that won him will keep him. 2. Don't let him think the girl he courted is not the same woman he married. 3. Be always natural and attractive and avoid being artificial. 4. Don't be a home devil and a street angel. 5. Be always tidy at home and never a fashion plate. 6. Don't gad about the streets or stores, neglecting home duties. 7. Be always a true helpmeet and not an idle help-along. 8. Don't gossip with neighbors and tell them your husband's business secrets. 9. Be faithful in all things, so that he'll find you indispensable. 10. Don't be too familiar, as familiarity breeds contempt. 11. Don't "mae" or "hell" keep rest in the saloon or elsewhere. 12. Be just a true woman and "wife" and "hubby" will keep.
Mrs. J. M. C.

Be His Soul Mate.

To the Editor of the Evening World:
Let your influence and acts control him in affluence and adversity. Trust him, lighten his burden, have day life by cheerful words. Home is the

Ten Stories of Mafia Murders

Terrible Unpunished Crimes of a Merciless Organization.

By Dr. Ascanio Carreni.

NO. 2—THE UNPUNISHED MURDER OF ANTONIO FLACOMIO.

TWO men, strolling arm in arm, left a St. Mark's place restaurant, about 9 o'clock on the night of Oct. 19, 1883. As they neared Cooper Union, one of the men disengaged his arm, offered, drawing a long bladed knife and drove the weapon into his companion's heart.

The stricken man collapsed, dead, on the sidewalk. The murderer, leaving the knife in the wound, walked quietly away.

So suddenly and with so little show of excitement had the whole tragedy occurred that it was nearly a minute before passersby on the well lighted street realized what had happened. By that time the assassin was out of reach.

The murdered man was Antonio Flacomio. The knife that had pierced his heart was identified as belonging to the restaurant known as La Ternaiera, whence he and his slayer had emerged just before the slaying. This restaurant was said to be a favorite resort of Mafia members. Several of its patrons were arrested on suspicion. Little by little the following facts were elicited:

Flacomio had often been seen in company with supposed members of the local Mafia, some of whom were also said to be counterfeiters. According to detectives, these men were wont to kill any associate who refused to commit a crime at their bidding, or whom they suspected of trying to betray them to the police.

Several men of the gang had come to Staten Island on April 6, 1881. Among them was Flacomio and a South street barber named Valerio Lazzarotto.

During the day a member of the gang, Carmelo Farrachi, had been found dead near the Richmond Turnpike, a sword cane's blade through his heart. Flacomio and Lazzarotto were arrested on suspicion.

Both men, however, managed to bring forward witnesses to prove they were no where near Farrachi at the time. So they were set free.

Farrachi and Flacomio, according to the detectives, had been suspected of betraying the secrets of some Mafia counterfeiters, and had therefore been marked for death. Farrachi had fallen and Flacomio died to New Orleans to escape a like fate.

Four years Flacomio remained in the South. Then, perhaps, thinking himself safe, or else lured by the local Mafia, he returned to New York.

He renewed his old relations with the men who frequented the St. Mark's place restaurant. His death was resolved upon and two men were told off to kill him.

One of these two appointed slayers, known as Vincenzo Carasello, was a dear friend of Flacomio's and warned the doomed victim. Flacomio does not seem to have tried to profit by the warning. Perhaps he had not time. For he was murdered the same night.

Nor did the Mafia vengeance pause there. On the same evening, less than an hour after Flacomio's death, two Italians went to a Bovey hotel and hired a room for a friend. This "friend" was Vincenzo Carasello, the man who had refused to kill Flacomio and who had warned the latter of his peril.

Vincenzo was apparently called upon to pay the price of his kinship. For, next morning, he was found dead in his room at the hotel.

The gas was found turned on and there were no signs of struggle. There was every evidence of suicide. The matter was not unusual enough for special comment.

The police worked vigilantly upon the Flacomio case. At first glance it would appear that their task was not especially difficult. There had been many witnesses to the tragedy. It had occurred at an early hour and in an illuminated, populous district. There were plenty of clues to the murderer.

But, as usual, the police and detectives found themselves confronting a dead wall. Witnesses whose word might quickly have convicted the knifer were either oath-bound members of the own gang or were terrorized into silence by that same gang.

No Italian dared to risk the almost certain revenge of the Mafia by telling what he knew. While it was a fine thing to do justice, it was far pleasanter to remain alive.

So, at last, the persons arrested on suspicion were set free. And the annals of crime were swelled by one more unpunished murder.

Do You Realize?

That despondency in women is a mental condition often traceable to some distinctly female ill!

Women who are well do not have the blues, neither are they irritable and restless. Derangement of the female organism breeds all kinds of miserable feelings such as backache, headache, and hearing-down feelings. Try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. There is no doubt that it has made many remarkable cures of female ills after all other means had failed. There is hardly a day that some woman does not write us that this simple old medicine, made only of roots and herbs, has cured her of a severe illness after several doctors had done their best and failed.

Here are two such letters—read them—they are genuine and reliable.

Baltimore, Md.—"For four years my life was a misery to me. I had suffered with female troubles so long that I was discouraged. I had given up all hope of ever being well when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It restored my health and I felt as though new life had been given me, and I am recommending it to all my friends."—Mrs. W. S. Ford, 1938 Lansdowne St., Baltimore, Md.

Rockland, Me.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side and was miserable in every way. I had doctored until I was discouraged and thought I would never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. "After taking three bottles I never was so well in my life. I am recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."—Mrs. Will Young, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.
